Education and Socialization It is sufficient to observe how children are brought up. If one views the facts as they are and indeed as they have always been, it is patently obvious that all education consists of a continual effort to impose upon the child ways of seeing, thinking and acting which he himself would not have arrived at spontaneously.

Law, State, and Social Cohesion

By a social fact, Durkheim is referring to facts, concepts, expectations that come not from individual responses and preferences, but that come from the social community which socializes each of its members. . Although we might embrace the normative community behavior and share its values, we are constrained by its very existence. . Social facts are laws and customs that are external to and precede the individual.

Rules relating to the distinction between normal and pathological . Durkheim distinguishes between 'facts which are as they should be' and 'facts which ought to be something other than what they are'. • Normal social facts are those which appear in the most general forms. The others we may call morbid or pathological - Durkheim, however, observes that whether a social fact is normal or not depends on the precise phase of development of a social species.
